If you are writing about a patient, his or her identity must be protected. Either you should obtain written consent to publish the piece or you must disguise a patient's identity so that his or her friend or family member would not recognize the individual. In this case, the name must be changed. Other helpful changes might be: sex; physical characteristics (e.g., age, hair or eye color, body habitus); presenting illness; occupation; family constellation (number or age of children). Please let our editors know what you've changed. If you have questions please use the Contact Us form to query our editors.
